QUOTE OF THE DAY

"We're all here tonight and watching this broadcast because we love movies. Where did we fall in love with the movies? At the movie theatre. Watching a film in a theatre with an audience is an experience. We can laugh together, cry together, scream in fright together, perhaps sit in devastated silence together. And in a time in which the world can feel very divided, this is more important than ever. This is a communal experience you simply don't get at home. And right now, the theatre-going experience is under threat ... it is up to us to support them. During the pandemic we lost nearly 1,000 screens in the US. This is my battle cry. Film-makers, keep making films for the big screen. I know I will." – Sean Baker

"Thank you so much to the Academy. I grew up in Los Angeles, but Hollywood always felt so far away from me. So to be here, standing in this room is incredible." – Mikey Madison

"Yes, many people we celebrate tonight are not famous, they're not wealthy, but they are devoted to a craft that can in moments bring us all a little closer together. Now for almost a century we have paused every spring to elevate and celebrate an art form that has the power at its very best to unite us. So yes, even the face of terrible wildfires and divisive politics, the work, which is what this is about, the work continues.” – Conan O’Brien

“The whole way through, there was never a Black male designer that I saw that I could follow, that I could see as inspiration. To realize that... that’s actually me, it becomes a ‘Wizard of Oz’ moment.” – Paul Tazewell

“I believe it was William Shakespeare who said, ‘Writing is a bitch.’” – Amy Poehler
